Shopping Lists.
There are probably not many housewives, nowadays, who fail to have a thumb-shelf of the shopping list, that saver of time, money, and good temper.

The shopping list prevents gaps in the buying hours, by having all necessities for a task on hand before it is begun. Without it one may find, when her cake is partly mixed, that the baking powder has gone. Or when the garments are all ready to wash, the starch box should have been replenished with the last grocery order.

It takes three shopping lists to help me keep house. This is because I have not all the money I need to spend, and must therefore buy the things and everything which suits my family.

My lists are labelled "Must Have," "Need, but can do without," and "lastly

The housewife who must keep house on a limited income will know almost exactly what the separate lists contain. The "Must Have's" include all household necessities, not only in the food line, but such items as soap, candles, pillows, cases, children's shoes and garments, as well as the same things for the grown-ups. Sometimes even the "Must Have" list includes a thing for quite a while before it is crossed off, "I'll get it later, and cross it off." But the "Must Have's" are permanent institutions. Hardly ever is one of them removed from the list until it has been bought and put to use.

The "Need" list includes such things as new rugs, books, magazines, things in the house which are beginning to get shabby, but which, if money were available, could be made to do a little longer. The fourth list is the "Needs" list, and are carefully minded till an unexpected check comes.

When it is necessary to change a "Need," to make room for a "Must Have," often that a "Need" goes on the "Like to Have," though sometimes a "Like to Have" is transferred to the "Needs" list, because the housewife knows the "Needs" list, and are carefully minded till an unexpected check comes.

So, when it is necessary to change a "Need," to make room for a "Must Have," often that a "Need" goes on the "Like to Have," though sometimes a "Like to Have" is transferred to the "Needs" list, because the housewife knows the "Needs" list, and are carefully minded till an unexpected check comes.
